religion scores reflect beliefs. Religion organizations are in the midst of a national renaissance, according to the 2000 Census. Religious organizations are now more prominent in the nation's life than they have been in a century. They are more popular than ever in the United States, and their influence is growing. Despite a decline in the number of religious organizations, their impact continues to grow. In 2000, the number of organizations increased by 9.5 million. Organizations are now the largest and most diverse sector of the voluntary sector, accounting for 70% of all organizations in the United States. These organizations are increasingly diverse, with a greater diversity in their member bases and a wider range of activities. The majority of organizations are religious, with 56% of all organizations identifying themselves as religious. However, the growth in religious organizations is not the only phenomenon. Non-religious organizations are also growing, with 44% of all organizations identified as non-religious. The majority of these organizations are nonprofit, with 42% of all organizations identified as nonprofit.

The number of organizations in the United States increased significantly between 2000 and 2009. This increase is attributed to a combination of factors, including a strong economy, increased charitable giving, and an increased interest in volunteering. The growth in organizations is not limited to religious organizations, however. Non-religious organizations are also growing, particularly in the areas of education, health, and human services. The majority of these organizations are nonprofit, with 42% of all organizations identified as nonprofit.

The document appears to be a page from a textbook or a journal, discussing topics related to social work, education, and ethics. The text is dense and technical, indicating it is part of a scholarly discussion or academic paper. However, without clearer visibility, the specific content or context remains unclear. The page number 51 indicates it is from a larger work, possibly a collection of articles or a research paper.
